People of State Show Good Faith. The people of the state have accepted in nod faith the declaration of the political arties, and especially the declaration of the Rochester convention, to mean a priroary law state-wide in its application and operation and insuring to party voters the right to nominate practically all candidates for elective offices. This expectation is not met by the direct nomination bill reported to the Lexislature by the Assembly Judiclary Committee. In working out the details of a system of direct nominations, honest differences of opinion may exist.
These differences should be settled by discussion and perhaps by mutual concession and compromise that involve no surrender and compromise that involve no surrender of the essential and vital elements of the principle of state-wide direct nominations that all supervision be removed.
